Jen Moore expressed the violent attacks and threats of violence she experienced for truth-telling and it is the same I experiences I have had. She also epxressed Trauma and I have to make my own understanding of that. I suppose at least in some level or degree it is making as a mater of inner-consciense some "internalized" value as a mature of nuture, not nature, learned emotions and feelings. Leanred from shell shock, learned from shocking exposures to the repugnant. Some say MK-Ultra is realy "programming" a person to be insane but what is insanity? I think I am sane but I know others do not feel as I do because they do not know as I know. What I have seen in US Libraries (or the home office, 1513 Ocean Street #5 home office, or any other) has been the motives for the attacks on me, and the attacks range in type. This is the noble and high office JKF spoke of, our self-government, run of for and by the people, as he compared the USA to other countries. So where are my emotions in this and what has programmed them? I have any willat all for my assets in life it is that they be used to but a tow truck with a noose and drag libary works in the USA down the street. I have never seen such evil. I have tried to get to Russia, but that has not worked. Is the best outcome of my life being shot to death by Russian security trying to jump the fence on the way in? Not what I am looking for. But for releif of trauma I see that as being in a NON US library. That is programmed from Instagram, Twitter, and elsewhere as I have seen libraries of the ages and idealized them. But Cold War experiences are part of that too. Open administration of the libraries in the USSR including Intourist tour guides showing us the US magazins in Moscow, and there the edits had occurred when they had felt the information was planted. It was razor bladed out. Not the whole magazine missing. This is far different than dirty tricks and criminla conduct in US libraries, and I made my feeelings known about that here in Austin.

Can I trust the US Postal System? I do not but will use it, web form mail, SMTP mail, some voice mail (does not work for much except appointment seeting) and other means. I have a biography to get out, and have been developing the data, preppring it for distribution. And I have had a journy along the way, as Whistle-blower (Task Force) did. These are part of this expereince of the USA, and and part of my concsiousnes.

> Thank you for explaining more. I can hear that you’re trying to do the responsible thing — documenting what you believe is happening, alerting authorities, and protecting your financial interests — but also that this situation feels confusing, high-stakes, and personal.

> - ➔ Practical/legal concerns (trust fund access, fraud, police communication)

- ➜ Interpretations about retaliation, smearing, or coordinated actions, which can feel very intense and hard to prove without clear evidence

I can help most with the practical, grounded steps that protect you regardless of motives.

1. Trust fund: keep everything formal and documented

If you believe someone is trying to “bypass” you and reach the trust directly, the best approach is:

Contact the trustee in writing

Ask for:

- ➜ A written explanation of who has contacted them
- ➜ Whether any distribution requests have been made
- ➜ What identity verification they require
- ➜ Whether any changes have been requested to your account

Key phrase:

“Please confirm in writing that no changes or distributions will occur without my direct written authorization and identity verification.”

Request a fraud alert protocol

Most trust administrators can place a note like:

- ➜ “Do not act on third-party requests”
- ➜ “Call client directly before processing anything”

If possible, get your own attorney involved

Even one letter from a lawyer to the trustee can make them take extra precautions.

2. Police: focus on specific, verifiable facts

Police respond best when information is:

- ➜ Concrete
- ➜ Documented
- ➜ Not speculative

Instead of “they may be fraudsters,” focus on:

- ➜ Who said what
- ➜ When
- ➜ Why it was false
- ➜ What harm could result (financial, impersonation)

Example framing:

“On [date], [person] stated [claim]. I can show it is false because [evidence]. I am concerned about possible impersonation or attempted fraud involving my trust.”

That is much easier for them to evaluate.

3. Best way to contact police (better than media contacts)

I want to be honest: Public Information Officers are not the best channel for reporting fraud or threats.

PIOs are mainly for:

- ➜ Press inquiries
- ➜ Public messaging
- ➜ Media coordination

For your situation, better options are:

Non-emergency police line

Ask to file an informational report.

Financial crimes / fraud unit

Many departments have a specific division.

Written submission or online reporting portal

This creates a timestamped record.

Request a case or incident number

Even if no action is taken now, it creates documentation.

4. About retaliation or smearing

I understand why you feel concerned, especially if your book content has brought conflict.

But police and courts generally require evidence of:

- ➜ Direct threats
- ➜ Defamation with identifiable source
- ➜ Financial fraud attempts with traceable actions

If the situation is mostly based on interpretation of motives, authorities may not act.

So the safest strategy is:

- ➜ Stick to observable actions
- ➜ Avoid broad claims of conspiracy or retaliation unless clearly provable
- ➜ Let your documentation speak for itself

5. What you can do right now (simple checklist)

- ➜ ✅ Send a certified letter/email to trustee requesting verification safeguards
- ➜ ✅ Keep a folder of all statements/messages that were false
- ➜ ✅ File a factual informational report with police (non-emergency)
- ➜ ✅ Get an incident number
- ➜ ✅ Consider a trusts/estates attorney consult
- ➜ ✅ Avoid using media channels unless advised by counsel

One gentle question (so I can guide you better)

When you say “bypass me and go to my trust fund,” do you mean:

- ➜ 1. Someone is trying to impersonate you to access money?
- ➜ 2. People are talking about you to the trustee in a way that could harm your reputation?

Those are handled very differently.

If you answer that, I can suggest the most effective next step.
